Scott's first expedition, the Discovery Expedition, took place from 1901 to 1904. The expedition's goal was to explore the Antarctic continent and to conduct scientific research. Scott and his team spent two years in the Antarctic, and they made a number of important discoveries, including the first sighting of the South Pole.

Scott's second expedition, the Terra Nova Expedition, took place from 1910 to 1913. The expedition's goal was to reach the South Pole and to plant the British flag there. Scott and his team reached the pole on January 17, 1912, but they were forced to turn back due to bad weather. On the return journey, Scott and his team perished in a blizzard.

Scott's third expedition, the British Antarctic Expedition, took place from 1914 to 1917. The expedition's goal was to complete Scott's unfinished work and to reach the South Pole. The expedition was successful, and the team reached the pole on January 19, 1917.
